Chinese Emmigration to the Hawaiian Islands.

[From the Hongkong Daily Press.]

By driving the trade away from Hongkong no good has been done, but, on the contrary, some harm. The object of His Excellency the Governor was most signally tread on each other's toes; while they mu- defeated; the emigration to Hawaii has never listened to the representations of the Tung Wah Hospital Committee, but it is not so carefully supervised as it would have been by the Hongkong officials. For instance, we do not believe that such a fearful outbreak of small-pox would have occurred at Honolulu had the emigrants sailed from this port. It would be far better for the emigrants and better for the countries to which they are bound that this should be made the emigration depot for China, as the chance of abuses might be reduced to a minimum here. It is unfair to British shipowners and merchants that they should be precluded from all participation in a lucrative and perfectly honorable trade. Emigration properly conducted is one of the greatest possible benefits to letter or certificate of character; but the | mankind. It has done more to build up the fabric of the British Empire than any other agency, not excluding commerce. It is the vent by which relief is afforded to overcrowded centres of population; it is the source from which new nations spring into being on the waste places of the earth. To seek to check it is an act of folly on the part of any Government : how much more in this way reared vigorous nations, one of which now ranks among the foremost Powers of the world in wealth, intellect, and population! We trust, therefore, that the British Authorities will take into consideration the prospects of Chinese emigration, the altered circumstances under which it is conducted, and sanction such alterations in the regulations as will permit of passenger ships clearing from Hongkong with Chinese emigrants to any part of the world where there is a Chinese Consul. A Modern Courtship.

SIR:-I notice in your issue of the 14th ult. a communication from F. Johnson complaining of the very harsh tratment he, with others, had been subjected to in being summarily sent over to the Pest House through the mistaken diagnosis of a physician employed by Government as an inspector, in connection with the prevailing epidemic.

That a simple rash should have been mistaken for small-pox in the case alluded to, is attributed by the complainant, to the ignorance of the physician. And it must be evident that either ignorance, or a reckless disregard of profesional decency, and the comfort and convenience of others, was accountable for an action fraught also with danger to the lives of those in behalf of whom the complaint was uttered.

To the Editor of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser:

Call such an occurrence a mistake, and then add the fact that several persons possessing certificates for good vaccinations recently performed by the same individual, have died of small-pox, and is any one's confidence in his professed ability likely to be heightened thereby? Or can we wonder at the not limited prevalence among natives, as a result therefrom, of the idea that vaccination affords no protection against small

I have it on good authority that a lay vaccina tor, not long since, was sent by this same physician to vaccinate an infant in a quarantined house, an whom the eruption of small-pox was several days old, (and when vaccination could have done no posible good) the child having been seen on the very same day by the physician himself. The gentleman sent, however, happily recognized the disease, and did not vaccinate the infant, otherwise he might have carried the infection far and wide, and perhaps have introduced it into the very bosom of his own family. Now what could explain such an action as this, unless it were that the physician referred to, did not know small-pox when he saw it, or that he had some ulterior object in view, best known to himself. The house in which their child was, had been quarantined for two weeks or more, and had been frequently visited in the interval by this physician; and had this child been vaccinated, as it ought to have been, when the quarantine was first imposed the chances are fifty to one that its life would have been sayed. But no! This child was taken to the Pest House, and died there, notwithstanding the repeated intercessions of its parents that it should be vaccinated; and this to a regular salaried vaccinator-was this life any the less valuable because it was that of a It is curious, thus to be informed, that at one non-paying patient?
